NOF's online support community uses the internet to bring people with osteoporosis together. If you do not live near an existing support group or don't know anyone with similar concerns about their bone health, the members of NOF's online community can serve as a great source of support and a channel to learn more about living with the disease.

The online health community includes blogs, individual web pages, discussions, message boards and more.

Participation is open to people concerned about their bone health, patients with osteoporosis, caregivers, family members and health professionals. There is no cost. Visit Online Health Community to join.
