Chimes Virginia offers supported living options and staffing alternatives that enable individuals with intellectual disabilities to live in homes, apartments and communities of their choice. Residential options range from Chimes operated single-family homes and apartments for people who may require 24-hour support to in-home support for people who function at a semi-independent level and only require “drop-in” services. Several of the homes are fully accessible with specialized adaptive equipment.

The level and type of services and supports vary based on the specific needs and choices of the individual. Chimes staff assist individuals to become as independent as possible by helping them to acquire new skills and while giving them opportunities to pursue their interests in the community.

One home is operated with the support of Marian Homes, an arm of the Knights of Columbus. This relationship provides financial support, opportunities for social interaction and community service. Funding for services is provided through the Fairfax County Community Service Board. Chimes Virginia operates eight group homes with five in Fairfax and three in Annandale.
