Progressive Supranuclear Palsy (PSP) is a rare brain disorder similar to Parkinson's disease that affects a person's physical movement and bodily functions. There is no known cause or cure.

The mission of CurePSP (formerly the Society for Progressive Supranuclear Palsy) is to promote and fund research into finding the cause and cure for PSP. The Society provides information, education, support, and advocacy to persons with PSP, their families, and caregivers. The Society educates physicians and allied health professionals on PSP and how to improve patient care.
