Optometrist at Charlottesville Eye Associates will examine the internal and external structure of the eye to assess its neural connections, determine its ability to see color accurately, and measure depth perception. Also will assess and, with corrective lenses, improve the patient's ability to see both close up and from a distance. Perhaps most importantly, they can diagnose eye disease. Optometrists will consult with ophthalmologists regarding the care for cataract patients and can often provide much of those patient's pre- and post-operative care. As the primary eyecare provider, they are on the front lines to observe early signs of systemic conditions, and, by acting in due course of their examination, contribute to their patient's overall health.
