The University of Richmond School of Law maintains the Harry L. Carrico Center for Pro Bono and Public Service. The center connects the skills and talents of the law students with the greater Richmond community. The Center offers a variety of pro bono opportunities, that could include helping a victim of domestic violence or assisting a non profit organization with incorporation.

Note: law student volunteers must be supervised by a licensed attorney or law school faculty member. For assistance, contact the Virginia State Bar's Virginia Lawyer Referral service at 800-552-7977 or your local legal aid or public defender's office.
