A Medical Social Worker can help a patient, and the family members, in assisting with the hospital discharge. Your medical social worker will plan out the services that will ensure you receive continuous care after you leave the hospital premises.

Medical Social Workers assist in the development of the care plan and they also offer support for emotional adjustments to lifestyle changes affecting the patient and the family members.

Other ways that your medical social worker can help include:

- counseling sessions with the patient
- rehabilitation guidance and support

- alternative living arrangements
- resources for healthcare policy
- advance directives
- facility-based care placement, if necessary
- health crisis intervention
